MORTUARY SCIENCE

{ "You may encounter many defeats, but you must not be defeated. In fact, it may be necessary to encounter the defeats, so you can know who you are, what you can rise from, how you can still come out of it." }

– Maya Angelou

Maygan Rosas grew up in the countryside outside of San Antonio. She graduated from Sandra Day O'Connor High School in 2013 with honors from the National Honor Society, the Hispanic National Honor Society, and Mu Alpha Theta. Maygan actively volunteered within her community with special needs children. She has always been an advocate for those who needed their voices heard. This sparked her mission to achieve a degree in teaching to continue helping the youth of her community.

Maygan is a mother to three beautiful boys who are her life and motivation. After losing her grandfather in 2020, she discovered her calling was in deathcare. The mortuary science program was a perfect fit and she finally felt right on track. Unfortunately, in 2021, she unexpectedly lost her father which drastically changed her life. However, he raised her to be persistent, hardworking, and to never give up on her dreams. She uses her promise to her father every day that she would push herself to be the best mortician she possibly can. One day she hopes to make a difference in the world of mortuary sciences and more importantly, make her father, grandfather, and children proud.
