Adrienne McCall Arts in Teaching

"Education is the most powerful weapon which you can use to change the world."

-Nelson Mandela

Biography

Adrienne McCall was born in Huntsville, Alabama and moved to the San Antonio area before starting elementary school. She was educated in Judson ISD, graduating Cum Laude from Judson High School in June 2012. Adrienne has always felt the responsibility of setting a good example for her younger siblings. She was raised in a family that stressed the importance of education. Her family is part of the reason she decided to pursue a degree in education.

In the spring of 2012, Adrienne was notified that she was selected as a recipient of the prestigious Susan Oppenheimer Scholars Scholarship. Since fall 2012, Adrienne has worked part-time and has carried a full course load. By dedicating herself to achieve her educational and career goals of becoming an early childhood educator, she has consistently remained on the Honor Roll in preparation for transferring to a university.

Adrienne has realized that children do not take an interest in learning unless the material is presented by a teacher who cares and can show them how the material relates to their lives. Adrienne hopes to be the positive educator that ignites the sparks of bright futures in young and impressionable minds.
